Out and About with our Community

About The Old Schoolhouse and the Sacred Life Vision

Sacred Life is the not-for-profit inner core of the Old Schoolhouse, the original 1890's Pie Creek School at 494 Eel Creek Rd, 8 mins drive SW from Gympie.

Hi everyone, if you're looking for help to grow, connect and find peace and balance in your life, I'm offering quite a few things here at the Old Schoolhouse. I'm celebrating being here for a year now, and have been working very hard to develop the property, including actioning a permaculture plan, building the gardens and working towards self-sufficiency!

I feel blessed to have been accepted so warmly into the community here and hope to do my part to keep building great connections and to help others and myself to keep growing and to keep a positive, healthy vision for now and the future. I'm hoping to place the property and vision into a trust once I get a clear structure and process.

The Old Schoolhouse is a calm, safe space where regular events like meditation, yoga, wellbeing events, information sharing and trading, LETS Community Exchange System info, learning about herbs and other community based interests and activities take place. See the regular events for 2024 below. All events are at not-for-profit prices and are professionally run by myself and other vetted facilitators.

Have something to offer? New facilitators are welcome.

The Sacred Life Vision is to create a humble, sacred, healthy space from where people in the local community can safely connect to learn and grow together, to transcend grief and fear, to raise positive energy, expand consciousness and to experience community while manifesting a more heartfelt, organic, and harmonious world.

I'm looking for one or two like-minded and physically able souls who would have spare time to help with the property and gardens in exchange for a caravan site

Do you feel the call to connect? Please give me a call on on 0479 123 272 . Blessings! Narayana

Hugh's Health Support

Raw Milk or Pasteurised - which is better?

Raw milk is available from some health food stores in Southeast Queensland. It's a farm to consumer product sold in standard 2 litre disposable bottles and labelled as "Bath Milk, not for human consumption". It's a rich milk from Jersey or Guernsey cows and has a high cream content.

Milk is valued by its butterfat content, which is the key nutrient.

Raw milk producers must maintain scrupulous hygiene in the dairy with high health standards for their milking herd. One pleasing fact about this unpasteurised milk is its shelf life. It generally stays usable for a good 5 days longer than normal pasteurised milk.

Why is that?

I once lived in Belgium and ran the mix in an ice-cream factory in the industrial northern suburbs of Brussels. My employer and mentor Charles was a good Frenchman with a degree in the chemistry of milk from a university in Switzerland. Charles explained to me that raw milk had a "bacteriostatic factor". If a bowl of fresh raw milk is put on the kitchen bench it will not begin to "turn" until 24 hours have passed (the way milk 'turns' is the basis of cheese making).

If chilled when fresh the milk retains this bacteriostatic factor, which is denatured by the heat of pasteurisation.

Until the early 1990's there were many raw milk dairies in Australia, for example micro dairies providing fresh goat milk, however they were forced to close when legislation required that all milk for human consumption be pasteurised, an industrial level process beyond the resources of small producers.

Raw milk sales are banned in most of the developed world, all milk must be pasteurised, a heat treatment to kill microbes. The pasteuriser is a continuous flow heat exchanger with hot water on one side and milk on the other, the milk must be heated quickly to the required temperature of around 71 deg C for a limited time (about 15 seconds) then rapidly cooled by chilling. An important factor deciding these temperatures and times is the microbial count of each batch of milk.

Pasteurisation allows dairies to supply milk to factories with a higher microbe count. I know for a fact that a dairy factory in Victoria used to deal with large batches of souring milk by adding sufficient caustic soda to normalise the acidity then run the batch through the pasteuriser. One excellent small dairy in the Sunshine Coast hinterland will reject a batch of milk if the microbial count is excessive rather than increase the pasteurisation temperature to suit the batch. I've noticed that this dairy's milk tends to stay fresher for longer.

Our immune system should recognize microbes, but it isn't good at recognizing the intestinal contents of killed microbes, a factor in allergic reactions to milk.

Homogenisation breaks up the fat in milk by sudden pressure which smashes the droplets making them small enough to stay in suspension. Because this prevents the cream from rising it's impossible to know how much cream the milk really has - the cream may be separated to go into other butterfat products and the milk thickened with milk powder to restore the flavour. Another problem with these microfined fats is that they may elude proper digestion and when absorbed cause immune disturbances, or even lodge in crevices such as behind heart valves to attract microbial or inflammatory problems. Fortunately, non-homogenised milk is readily available.

Traditionally, when nomadic peoples began to acquire herds, the milk was a valuable nutritional supplement and preserved by culturing to make curds and cheeses. Eating butter, yogurts and cheeses is preferable to drinking milk. Homemade kefir from milk kefir grains is a remarkably nourishing food and probiotic.

Milk and milk products are embedded in our dietary culture such that persons who avoid dairy have created a market for milk substitutes. These substitutes are not foods and to be enjoyed in very limited amounts.

Support local dairies as much as possible. Enjoy the great range of quality products available to us, they are a sign and source of food richness in our country.

Until next time, keep safe and be well,

Hugh Wallace Naturopath

Korrinne's Gardening Tips

BENEFITS OF CATNIP

Catnip is a strong-smelling herb and belongs to the mint family, has oval-toothed, dark green leaves and pretty flowering tops which pollinators love. A very easy plant to grow that is an attractive addition to your garden and has long been thought to have medicinal properties. Its dried leaves and flowers are traditionally used in a tea for this purpose to treat conditions like insomnia, anxiety, and headaches. In some cases, the roots of catnip can be used however, these act as a stimulant instead of a relaxing agent.

CATNIP TEA

Mix 2 teaspoons of dried catnip leaves or flowers with 1 cup of boiling water. Add lemon juice and honey, stir, and let cool for several minutes. Many people prefer a steeping time of about 10 to 15 minutes producing a woody, almost grassy taste. The longer it sits with lemon in it, the more you'll taste the natural underlying minty, citrus flavor. Some people prefer drinking the tea immediately after cooling.

USES:

Catnip tea is most commonly used to treat nervousness and anxiety, indigestion, insomnia and has anti-inflammatory properties.

It has historically been used to treat issues like arthritis, coughs, hives, fevers and viruses and is a diaphoretic which can induce perspiration, without increasing body temperature during a fever which, in turn, helps to fight, eliminate and detox the source of the fever.

Catnip tea's biggest health benefit is the calming effect that it can have on the body as it contains nepetalactone, which is similar to the valepotriates found in a commonly used herbal sedative, valerian. This can improve relaxation, which may boost mood and reduce anxiety, restlessness, and nervousness.

The tea can also be used as a bug repellent and bite healer by putting the tea in a spray bottle.

Of course, catnip can also be used in tinctures, be dried and/or powdered.

Like all things used on the body and medicinally, self-research is fully recommended and the decision to use is ultimately up to you.

"The Missing Link Between the Soil, Your Health and Emotions"

Measuring the wellness of the body through Cellular Chemistry

Your cellular chemistry is like the soil plants grow in. If the plant is diseased or deficient you correct the SOIL, not the plant. If a human is diseased, sick or deficient, you correct the human cellular chemistry (soil of the body), not medical symptoms.

The link between food grown in healthy soil & the necessity for the body to be able to assimilate that nutrition, is vital. This absorption of nutrient is dependent upon the strength of your cellular chemistry. This creates the balance between sugar regulation for energy and brain chemistry for emotional and mental stability.

- Why your current health regime may not be working for you.
- How a simple, non-invasive urine & saliva test reveals the source of your illness, chronic diseases and emotional imbalances
- How cellular chemistry testing cuts through confusion, mis-information around human wellness.
- How a simple correction in your cellular chemistry has a profound affect on your energy levels.
- Why moving away from multiple remedies and medications to food based solutions, grown in highly mineralised soils, revitalise human health & mental and emotional stability...
